Show HN: GitLab CI runner that runs shell scripts on different host OSes - jgmmo ====== jgmmo I've been running my Ruby on Rails app on DigitalOcean for a couple years. It's a great service, but unfortunately their postgresql image doesn't run mysql, and there are some quirks that make their CI/CD pipeline slow to use. So I wrote a small Ruby script to spin up a Vagrant box with the required versions of ruby and mysql installed so I could run my app's test suite locally in my CI pipeline. This ruby script is hosted on github and is intended to be pretty simple to use. I'm not sure if it's worth $14 or not, but I've put it out there if anyone has ideas. Prior Art Prior art rechargeable batteries have used metalised contacts to connect terminals of the battery to a charger or to connect the charger to an AC adapter or other power source. Such chargers typically consist of a casing containing a recharging circuit and a battery receiving socket, with a pair of electrical contacts being disposed on opposite sides of the socket. In order for a user of such a charger to apply power to the battery, they have to place a wire from the charger in contact with the battery contacts, with the other side of the wire being in contact with the charger contacts. Charging devices have also been known to be formed as multi-part assemblies that can be inserted into a socket on a wall socket to provide charging capabilities. Such devices have included a cover for holding a battery and a pair of plug contacts for connection to a wall socket. The batteries in these chargers are often connected to a wire in order for the user of the battery to know how much charge remains. Examples of prior art charger structures are shown in U.S. Pat. No. 5,227,908 (Crowley et al.), U.S. Pat. No. 5,057,873 (Crowley et al.), U.S. Pat. No. 4,867,555 (Amsalem), U.S. Pat. No. 4,742,146 (Amsalem), U.S. Pat. No. 4,529,197 (Johnson), U.S. Pat.
