Free Download Association between emotional well-being and health-related quality of life: a systematic review and meta-analysis. To evaluate the association between emotional well-being (EWB) and health-related quality of life (HRQOL) using a meta-analytic approach. A systematic review and meta-analysis of studies was conducted to investigate EWB-HRQOL association. The systematic review and meta-analysis were conducted using Pubmed, Embase, Web of Science, CINAHL and grey literature databases. The meta-analysis was performed using Stata. Nine studies (response rate = 74.4%, 95.9% CI = 71.9-78.0%) were included in the meta-analysis. The pooled weighted mean difference (WMD) was -0.57 (95.9% CI -0.95 to -0.19) and the pooled standardized mean difference (SMD) was -0.21 (-0.24 to -0.18) for EWB-physical well-being and EWB-mental well-being respectively. The high heterogeneity observed in the EWB-physical well-being (I (2) = 92.4%), EWB-mental well-being (I (2) = 89.6%) may be due to heterogeneity in the categorization of EWB. There was no significant association between EWB-physical well-being or EWB-mental well-being and HRQOL. The small number of studies and high heterogeneity between studies may limit the strength of the conclusions. As EWB cannot predict HRQOL, it may 570a42141b
