[VnVdPlayer CIAEo5YCJ] Q: Browser decides to render images as SVG when I upload the same images in Wordpress with W3 Total Cache I am using W3 Total Cache to cache the content of my website. Today, one of my webmaster did a security sweep on the site and discovered the code below is missing in the source. I installed W3 Total Cache, and the issue is gone. As soon as I uploaded the same image again, it started to render in the browser as SVG image. I looked at the source and the img src has gone. I cannot make it work again until the site is live again. I have the W3 Total Cache plugin on an older version of WordPress. What I did was I upgraded the plugin to the latest version, and it solved the issue. What is the reason for this behavior? And how to prevent this from happening again? UPDATE: We are on W3 Total Cache 2.2.9 version. When the issue happens, I see this in my PHP log file (I deleted some of the entries since this is not the issue): /home/xxxx/public_html/wp-content/plugins/w3-total-cache/w3-total-cache-minify-plugin/minify.php Call to undefined function...nocache_caching() My WordPress is using wp-content/uploads/2017/03/xxxx-xxx.jpg. The problem is that, even though the image has been updated, it will not update its cache in the web browser. So, the browser renders the old version of the image.
