And Mayor Ed Lee said he was impressed by not only how feisty the debate was but the sincerity of their respective views. “There were a lot of good points made,” said Lee, “one thing they all agreed on was that we need to do something about illegal immigration” It was a Republican event he said.” “These are good people,” said Lee, “They all want to do what’s best for the country and that means legal immigration. Nobody here is pushing for open borders. Nobody was saying the only solution to illegal immigration is to deport them. Most people here are not saying that. But they all agreed that there is a problem in terms of the cost of that illegal immigration. “These are people we are letting in, year after year, to come here and live and work illegally and they are citizens and they pay taxes. No one says they are going to round them all up and deport them.” And, as the candidate who says his city and country are open-minded and liberal - which is not exactly an oxymoron - Lee said he empathized with those who want to follow the law. Lee said the statement about the legalization of illegal immigrants has been used again and again on the campaign trail. “Everybody is basically saying they are illegal, everybody is saying that they should not be part of the country,” said Lee. “And that is not true, there are millions of people all across this country and they want to do what they are supposed to do.” “When someone say you are not a citizen
