Hi there, I know it's kind of an old post but I just did what anon76 said, I just had to use my Garmin, and that's it. Lol. But I'm making a backup of the original jetmouse keygen's, and I just don't know how to proceed, I think it has something to do with the pkzip method, that's what the other guy was doing. But anyway, here's my pkzip.zip, it hasn't been tested yet, but I don't have anything to lose. Thanks in advance. This often results in multiple bytes of input being processed by the application, resulting in unintended changes to the data that should only be processed by a separate part of the code. You've got a buffer overflow. Q: Can't register new user on site powered by app engine I am using a Django website and am trying to register new users into the site. I used this tutorial to create a custom database: This works fine when I run the code on my local machine, but when I deploy to app engine, I get the following error when the person tries to register: Exception Type: InvalidArgumentError Exception Value: Datastore operation fails: Key (email/69093412) does not exist for Entity (UserProfile). I think the problem is that the way I've set up my custom datastore, my site just doesn't have a key named "email" (for reference, my 'email' table only has a 'username' column). Am I incorrect here? Is there something I'm missing? EDIT: I think the issue is that the version of the sqlite database that app engine uses is different from that of the local one.
