Ascender is an indie adventure game. Its surreal and whimsical visual style is inspired by immersive surreal dreams and a feeling of current day while also being meticulously crafted. Ascender's simple mechanics challenge you with original puzzles for a deeper challenge and a rich story. The story is a journey and a dream. What is yours? Gameplay: Ascender is a hybrid action/puzzle platformer. The game features a unique puzzle mechanic that is applied to the player's surroundings and be developed throughout the gameplay. At a high level, the game's gameplay is quite simple. The player will control a falling spaceship (the ascender). To move, the player simply has to click in the direction they want to go. There is no jump button. The player simply picks the direction they want to go. Some moves require the player to grab an item off the ground. Releasing the mouse button while holding the button produces a grabbing interaction that allows the player to do a variety of things. To interact with the player's surroundings, the player can use the mouse to pick up and manipulate items in the environment. Items can be combined with other items to form new pieces, and different combinations make different items. To make items more difficult to manipulate, they can be broken into smaller pieces. This mechanic, combined with the idea that each item in the player's surroundings have different effects and qualities on the player, creates a gameplay that is very unique and challenges the player in entirely different ways each time the player plays. Ascender uses the player's surroundings (as interpreted by the player through the game interface and items) to form puzzles. Puzzles include pulling levers that change the environment, jumping on hoverboards to combine blocks and pick up items, sliding blocks to interact with the environment, and other various ways. Puzzles are constructed as a path to reach a higher level, where the player eventually attains the main goal. When the player starts to play Ascender, the main puzzles include two puzzles that guide the player in the first half of the gameplay, and the rest of the puzzles are unlockable through a "third-life". The player can choose to continue to play on the third life, further unlocking more puzzles. There is no pacing to the gameplay. Whenever the player acquires new powers, they can use it immediately without the need to wait. Stripped of the 'platformer'
