Nearly every aspect of the game has been updated for a new generation of gameplay. “Player Intelligence” and “Player Traits” deliver authenticity and versatility to the global skill sets and personality traits of more than 2,000 licensed players. “Player Intelligence” was revised to better reflect more players’ on-field tendencies. Players are now much more likely to dribble towards or pass the ball away from opponents, rather than towards them. When defending, players are now more likely to anticipate the next pass before moving toward the ball. “FIFA 22 will be a story-driven game featuring many different characters, teams, and places,” EA SPORTS producer Matt Prior said. “The on-field AI has been upgraded, so players will exhibit more intelligence, and they’ll express that intelligence more naturally by interacting with the ball in the air, running towards or away from opponents, and completing passes.” The ball physics in FIFA 22 are more realistic, and now include dribbles, powerslides and passes made using a “tap and flick” technique. FIFA 22 will also feature new visuals, including dynamic grass and snow in outdoor stadiums, more realistic ball physics and graphics that are all-new from top to bottom. Features:

- Player Traits – For the first time in the series, unique personality traits and physical attributes of the more than 2,000 licensed players, including player IDs as well as animated characteristics, are now reflected more specifically in their in-game performances. Every player has a “Unique Trait” that will affect his positioning and the pitch influence during gameplay. Some players might never receive the ball if they are a forward who likes to be on the shoulder of a defender, or if they are a defender who is on the opposite side of the pitch from the opposition’s strikers. For the first time, EA SPORTS has added a personality to each player in FIFA on the pitch. Players will now put pressure on the ball and display different behaviors. Examples of these include: a striker who is an excellent dribbler and likes to take on defenders, or a winger who is aggressive in the air and likes to head-butt the goalkeeper.
- Player Intelligence – Players will do things differently on the pitch now. Players now have much more “intelligence” that they will express in their gameplay. For instance,
