Articles Related to .Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) is an increasingly important cause of morbidity and mortality, and includes chronic bronchitis and emphysema. Of the 1.9 million COPD cases currently diagnosed in the US, more than 5 million have been estimated to be undiagnosed. In the US, cigarette smoking accounts for 90% of the cases of COPD. COPD is largely a preventable disease; by reducing smoking rates, the COPD epidemic can be eliminated. In Massachusetts (MA) the smoking rate is among the highest in the US, and a direct cause of COPD. Coping With the Scourge of COPD is a community-based, participatory research project, of which this R34 is a part. Through a series of focus groups, the project will address the social context of the experience of COPD, how COPD is managed within families, and the knowledge and behavior of health care providers. We will also ask respondents to reflect on their experiences, and to complete the Stanford Chronic Disease Self-Management Questionnaire. The study will be completed over a 6-month period and will include focus groups with women, middle-aged men, parents, and health care providers. Participants will include adults who are smokers and ex-smokers; their e79caf774b
