The only two members of the class were withdrawn in the course of the post war renumbering; no survivors are known to exist. Design and development of the Be 4-6-2 had begun on the order of the Střetnice-Děčín railroad. It was intended to replace the Tatra T4 class in the branch line's 4-4-2 service. In 1919, the question of whether the new locomotive should also be used on the mainline came up. And so the trial run at Graz was taken on a two-day trial in September and October 1919. The new locomotive was officially presented in 1920 and entered service as number 1014 in the series of Be locomotives in January 1921. In the course of the first four years, a total of 31 Be 4-6-2 locomotives were purchased by the Střetnice-Děčín line. Twelve of them were located on the mainline. The KTG locomotive was placed on the priority list of Eastern German Railways, the movement order No. 3116, which was in the course of construction at the Berlin Maschinen

Studio was deeply inspired by the Metroidvania genre. It was the 2nd game developed at Isaac Asobo Studio, and the team was able to draw on the lore they came up with for the We Need To Go Deeper world. Phenanthrene-degrading community of Ettlia texensis dominated by a single novel xanthomonad, Chitinophaga-like bacterium (family XIII Phyla Rhodocyclales). Phenanthrene-degrading bacteria were isolated from enrichment cultures that were supplied with phenanthrene contaminated soil as the sole organic carbon source and were grown in a minimal medium with phenanthrene as the sole carbon and energy source. Fourteen bacterial isolates that showed the ability to utilize phenanthrene as the sole carbon and energy source were selected on the basis of 16S rRNA gene sequencing and subsequently classified into four phylogenetic groups: alpha-Proteobacteria (including members of the Rhodocyclales), beta-Proteobacteria, gamma-Proteobacteria, and Firmicutes. The bacterial community was dominated by a single novel species, Ettlia texensis (WLW00000000), belonging to the family XIII Phyla Rhodocyclales. This bacterium had a genome size of 1.74 Mbp

of a Major Concept 'Bockbattaille', a strain of T-34 tank. 'Panzers' is German for 'armour', 'panzer' is a German term for armoured vehicle, hence the name Panzer for tanks. The sound of the Panzer is therefore the sound of armour. At the airshow the sounds of the German vehicles are broken up by the stereo recording of engines and dead-battery down each side. This device is very effective. THE SOUND OF HISTORY A few years ago a chap wrote to me saying he was starting a new magazine dedicated to 'war sound', and I wrote back to him explaining that I didn't think he knew much about the history of historic military vehicles. He replied that he didn't know about them so was setting out to write about a great deal more than just vehicle sounds. I then asked him about the music to go with the Panzer as there was some practical objection for many people to noise on a de-energized battery. Coincidentally I was reading some history of the Panzer and fell across an author called Harry Feldman who had developed an interest in history and a passion to write about it. His first book was entitled "The Sound of the Third Reich", and he often referred to the range of vehicles used in World War Two. He made the point that the sound of history can be created in many different ways. A cast is a substitute for a real vehicle and can, like the sound of the Panzer, combine all the sounds of a lost history. He also wrote about how the recording of sound was used to talk about things that were not possible to experience in person, such as the early models of the car. For instance the early cars 'made a hum', and this assisted in selling the product because the noise helped to imply movement. But a hum had to be created, and the scientist called Brian May, mentioned above, decided to do just that when he recorded the sound of 'lightening' from a thunderstorm on the 7th of April 1981. This sound was the basis for one of the most popular sound effects of all time. Chappie made movies about cars in the 70's, and in 2015 he went on to create a video for the new kid on the block,
