A. Are the instances of int and String act as the objects in the absence of null or "" in java? Yes, in the sense, null and "" are both the absence of anything. The main difference is how the context interprets them, null is often used in a strict context, e.g. if you do not initialize them you will get a compile error. Whereas "" on the other hand, is interpreted as a "wider" context, it is commonly used in an if or while statement, where its value will be ignored and never evaluated.
